

WHITNEY HORSES

Twenty of the Greatest Thoroughbreds in America Expected Soon.

of race-horses owned by Harry Payne Whitney, some twenty head in all, are

At Garden State, they are now at Brook Farm, New Jersey. When they arrive there, the quarters will be the same as at the farm which William Kerrick has owned over all winter. Kerrick will have charge of their training operations this summer as well as the supervision of the speed development of the Onock stable's racers.

The Whitney horses will give him a good test of the local training. This lot of high-class bloodbreds will be the strongest numerical group he has on the island track. It will exceed the number of its greatest rival, the string owned by James R. Keene. The lat-

By the total sum of racers is seventeen close proximity of the horses owned by the same man, for the trials for turf hounds will and zest to the winning routine of the training work, and will afford a chance to closely inspect both the merits of horses, and to analyze the good and poor points of each horse.

When Keene and Whitney shipped many of their race-horses to England and last fall they did not entirely lose the best of the best material, but they contained. Of the best of the race-horses are deprived of Colin, Balin and Stamina, but we have here at the present time ready to do battle

Horses in String Wintered Well.
The Whitney horses wintered exceptionally well at Brookdale. Ed Taylor, who had charge of them, reports that the entire lot escaped colds and influenza. This clean bill of health for the stable is remarkable.

The list of horses is made up of fifteen two-year-olds. Young horses are more susceptible to the changes in the season than old campaigners, and usually when a youngster is attacked with influenza it spreads through the whole stable. These fifteen colts and fillies have so far escaped the baneful effects of the disease.

fects of the malady—which often leaves its indelible mark on its victims—by placing them on the list of “roan-ers”—and they will reach their new quarters in first-class physical condition. Reports say that they have fine size and substance, and that the “Dute bunch,” as the sons and daughters of Hamburg are called, compare favorably in appearance with such great youngsters as Burgomaster and Artful.
